

WHAT IS ART?

Euclid Papanikolaou

The Basics

- Even though there is no specific definition for what art really is and its meaning has been debated for centuries, art is a form of expression that can be a creation from a wide range of activities such as painting, sculpture, music, literature, film and many more. It allows people to share their thoughts, emotions, and experiences in a way that cant be put in words alone.

These are all nice things to discuss about but,

WHAT IS ART REALLY FOR?

PRETTINESS

- Prettiness in art is not to make the individual forget the real world struggles but it provides a solution for them. Prettiness in art is what gives hope. A painting of a sunny meadow full of flowers or a kids running around in a park is happiness and hope preserved, waiting for somebody to use it in a time of need for positive thoughts and emotions.

SADNESS

- Art can make us feel less lonely. Sadness is a very common feeling in our lives and it can be the result of the loss of a loved one or a failed test or at times the simplest of difficulties such as the delivery guy mixing up our order. Art is here to be a reminder that all human struggle is normal. It can make our personal sadness more public and available and at the same time be factual proof that pain is all part of the human condition.

BALANCE

- Everyone is a little unbalanced in some way. Some are too emotional or too stoic, too calm or too excitable. The art we tend to be attracted to is usually what compensates us for what we lack. When we are interested in a work of art, it maybe because it contains what qualities we are in need of, at the corresponding time period. In that way art provides with balance in our lives and shapes us into a more well-structured and mentally stable version of ourselves.

GLAMOUR

Glamour in art can be anything. The human mind is often tricked into idealising things. Moreover, anything can look glamorous and fancy and it all depends on perspective and personal liking. However, Art is what brings glamour to its right place highlighting what is worth appreciating

HONORABLE PROPAGANDA

Among many ways, art can be used as a form of propaganda in order to be motivated into doing things you have to, but dont want to do. Art is propaganda, but for some of the most positive and dignitive attitudes in the world.
