SANTOURI

The santouri is a stringed, percussion, flat musical instrument. Its name comes from the Greek word "ψαλτήρι" and through the Persian language (sandur). It is an ancient musical instrument that was probably invented in Persia. The wider spread of the santouri in Greece is due to the arrival of the wave of Greek refugees from Asia Minor, after the disaster of '22.

BOUZOUKI

The name Bouzouki is believed to come from the word Bozouk(turkish), which means broken, apparently referring to the change the instrument underwent from East and Central Asia. During the population exchange between Turkey and Greece (1919-1922), the bouzouki made its appearance in Greece. The refugees brought with them their culture , on which they played the Al Oud or Outi as they called it. Very soon the outi was replaced by the bouzouki and the songs which were played by the Smyrne created another genre of music, the

ZOURNAS

Zourna or zournas derives its origin from the ancient well-known instrument called oxyavlos. It is a compound word made up of the words intense + fife. In the Greek land and mainly on the continent and the islands it is called karamouza or pipiza. Its sound is distinct because of the sharp and piercing sound it makes when played.

ASKOMANTOURA

The askomandoura is a wind musical instrument, a type of bagpipe, which is played as a traditional instrument on the Greek island of Crete, while it schematically resembles the tsabouna. Its use in Crete, as evidenced by various images, dates back to the 15th century.
